

Law360: McKool Smith's Top Female Attys Depart As Head Count Falls

In a recent Pulse article, Robin Cohen offers her perspective about women lawyers and rainmakers in law firms. A compelling reason that Robin Cohen, Adam Ziffer, Kenneth Frenchman, and Keith McKenna left McKool Smith is highlighted here: forming their own law firm ensures they can create and take advantage of the best opportunities to strategically lead the highest-stakes cases to their best conclusion. "To this day, and I've had judges tell me this, it's unusual to see a woman as lead counsel in a bet-the-company case," Robin said. "And I think that has to change. I'm amazed it hasn't changed faster."
